FILE PHOTO: President U.S. President Donald Trump (L-R), U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions and White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus walk from the Oval Office to speak to reporters before a cabinet meeting at the White House in Washington, U.S. February 9, 2017. REUTERS/Joshua Roberts Even before Trump took office, his administration ushered in a new era of vetting with forms, especially for those seeking entry to the United States from overseas. While under the previous administration, U.S. consular officers or employees at posts abroad typically met with non-citizen applicants to review their documents and interview them, these interviews have since been replaced with a brief online interview and a biometric test. The FBI has also started reviewing documents of more than 11 million immigrants who may be on the Bureau's so-called "no-fly" list, according to an internal FBI memo from FBI Director James Comey published last week. The documents of 30 U.S. citizens who have been on the no-fly list are being reviewed by the FBI to determine what evidence they may have against a specific individual for security reasons. The FBI has also stopped issuing visa renewals for Israelis to enter the United States. The FBI, which started a database of 90 million people who had been interviewed by the National Counterterrorism Center in 2014, has since added more than 5.6 million names to the database, The Associated Press reported. TRUMP ECONOMY PLAN Trump's transition team said in December that Trump wanted to boost American exports, which fell by 1 percent between the first and second quarters of 2017, by cutting regulations, boosting infrastructure investment and improving education. But trade experts said the new administration would face stiff opposition from Congress, which would have to pass legislation before Trump could act on many of his plans. For example, legislation passed in the last Congress to update trade laws is designed to promote American exports. But Trump cannot alter trade laws without first getting Congress to approve the 3da54e8ca3
